About the Conference

Rapid social changes, new developments in various fields, and contemporary complexities have spurred diverse theoretical and methodological frameworks for literary and language studies. These interdisciplinary intersections in contemporary English language and literature serve to bridge diverse fields such as linguistics, artificial intelligence, cultural studies, digital humanities, and psychology. They challenge traditional interpretations, emphasizing diversity, power dynamics, identity, and representation, while promoting ethical and political awareness.

This forum will enable scholars to explore new dimensions in textual analysis, reception theory, and language evolution. Embracing interdisciplinary perspectives not only revitalizes traditional literary studies, but also addresses global challenges like environmental sustainability and social justice.

The objective of this conference is to understand and explore that the future lies in collaborative research that leverages multiple disciplines, enhancing the relevance and inclusivity of English language and literature as a discourse in a rapidly changing world.
